When you are looking for a lawyer, you might have noticed that most of them wouldn't have put how much they are going to be charge you online. The reason behind this is quite clear as no two cases are same and based on the complexity of the charges and many other things, there is a fluctuation in the prices among clients. But, it's quite important to have a starting point, so you have a ballpark figure in your mind about how much the Los Angeles DUI lawyer is going to cost you.

The first thing you must keep in mind that fees of lawyer in majorly driven by the experience of that lawyer, amount of training he has in DUI laws and his win rate. What many people skip is thinking about many overhead costs which a lawyer might have to pay and might contribute significantly to the total cost he is going to you.

Following are some of such overhead costs:

- Training/Associations

When the talk is about training or associations of the Los Angeles DUI lawyer you are planning to hire, it's not if he is affiliated to the bar or not. Every lawyer, would have passed the bar. DUI laws are quite complex and keeps on evolving. Thus, it becomes important for the lawyer to stay updated with the changes. You might not be aware of the fact that DUI lawyers should be trained in National Highway Safety Administration Standardized Field Sobriety Course which is of around 25 to 40 hours.

- Experience

Nothing can beat experience when it comes to experience of the DUI lawyer. As the saying goes through the age comes the wisdom. This is same like in the case of doctors. You want your surgeon not being fresh off the school but with some decades of experience behind his back. Generally, the more experienced Los Angeles DUI lawyer you are going to opt for, the more you need to pay him.

- Office and Overheads

Office and various overheads like employee payrolls, rents are few things which people never think about. The lawyer is going to add all these expenses in his overall costs.

Cost Estimate

To give you a ballpark estimate about the fees, the first offense is going to cost around $2000 to $3000 if you opt for an experienced and successful lawyer. Second and third will cost you around $4000 to $6000.
